Ich danke Ihnen für Ihre Einladung
Ihren an der Jahrleitung des Künstler-

Mund von Florent Jels alles mich ziemlich informiert sein werden - ich möchte nur
noch mein Geburtsdatum:

Sehr geehrter Herr Doktor

Wir sind heute ein freundliches Brief von Ihnen vom 15. VI. in dem Sie sich nach meinem Befinden vor Ihrer Reise von Paris noch erkundigen. Ich danke Ihnen sehr höflich für diese Aufmerksamkeit.

Sie waren bei uns am 6. Juni. Ich hatte es in meinem Vornachbuch notiert, es steht
da kurz „Schneid“. Weit entfernt Ihren Namen zu einem unächlichen Zusammenhang mit den Ereignissen dieses Tages ^{oberlegendmeter} zu bringen —
muss ich Ihnen berichten dass ich mich gegen 7^h abend dieses Tages schnell entschließen
musste dass ^{falschlich} „geschnitten“ werde:

Wir sind seither 5 Wochen

Petit courrier

© Le peintre Kars vient de subir une grave opération. Tous nos vœux de prompt rétablissement.

© On a découvert en Crimée, près de Bachtchi-Sarai les restes d'un temple du V^e siècle et un système de canalisation de la même époque si parfaitement conservé que, un peu restauré, il pourrait fournir à la ville 2.500 hectolitres d'eau par jour.

den Verlauf meiner Gallenblasenoperation war absolut günstig - aber die Reconvaleszenz nach diesem schweren Eingriff dürfte wohl noch längere Zeit in Anspruch nehmen.
Die Pflege meiner G. Frau und ~~der~~ der sonstigen Gärten einer putzigen Familien-pension bemühen sich sehr um mich - und vermögen mich in jeder Weise - so hoffe ich doch wenigstens bald wieder zur Arbeit zurück kehren zu können.

Wohlmal besten Dank und sehr freundschaftliche Grüße an Sie
und von meiner Frau

W. Georg Nass.

P.S. Die Ihnen vom bekannten Ereignisse nach dem 6. Juni erklärten Ihnen auch - kaum - einer auch zu unserem grossen Bedauern Ihre teleph. Anrufe in der rue Carli'mont unerhört geblieben sind. D.O.

KARS

In the works of Kars which characterize him best the ideal of harmony seems to be perfectly realized. It is the harmony of the represented phenomenon with its aesthetic form, that of line with color, of surface with mass and space. Within this harmony the virtual presence of one leading idea is felt, that of greatness, of monumentality. The very volumen of bodies and of entire landscapes is treated with a tenderness, with a cult, sometimes recalling early Flemish masters. Is Kars likewise natural and naive, is his creative process as primary as theirs ?

We find the answer in ~~some~~ meaningful facts. This spirit of adoration of physical power dwelt in a delicate and even weakly body, the worshipper of Beauty was himself mysteriously ugly. So his art would rather be the outcome of a personality which overcomes itself, finding in the work its own antithesis which is perfection and happiness.

Georges Kars (Karpeles), also the son of a miller, born 1880 in the village Kralupy near Prague, had a peaceful or even idyllic youth. He studied first at ~~the~~ a secondary school in Prague and at a private art school in Munich; after two years Franz von Stuck admitted him to the Academy. Until 1905 he was his student, though French impressionists attracted the young artist more. At the first opportunity he went to Paris, afterwards to Spain. There he studied nature, mainly ~~a~~ on the sea shore, and copied admired masters like Velasquez and Goya, while his friendship with the cubistic painter Juan Gris seems not to have influenced his art. Later, ~~as a resident~~ he still spent many summers of Porto, ~~Rhegatilbospenbedunpedaustea~~ in Spain.

To Prague too he returned often: "Also in the spirit of some young artists of Prague a revolution broke out. However, I was stronger impressed by it in Paris where Matisse and Picasso worked." It should be noted that in Paris too he always worked closely to Nature, out of faithful Love of Life. Florent Fels divided the development of Kars into three periods: One of mere Impressionism, until 1908; a second, until 1914, of a rather analytical conception of form by stronger means of expression; and his third, when he strove to objective form, by both line and color, subordinating his personal feeling to control of Nature.

At the time of all these efforts which required the man in his entirety, not much of the happiness of his childhood had been left. May be that a few echoes of it still enabled him to overcome dangerous complexes and singular crises. When I came on a summerday of 1931 to visit him in his home on the Montmartre he was bedridden and had to be operated the other day. With wishes for his health I wanted to go. But Mrs. Kars invited me to stay, and her invitation was so convincingly sincere that I accepted, and we spoke much and exclusively about him. She distinguished me by great confidence and told me on this deep man things which I wouldn't publish if he were still alive. Today, however, I am obliged to do so. Once, amidst unusual successess, he came home in visible depression and declared to his wife that he have not the slightest talent and would not longer cheat people and himself. Even she (who looked as if she were his embodied ideal of abundance and was highly educated, motherly and devoted) was not able to get him out of this dejection. In spite of his physical weakness he hastened to become a guard of a factory - until the crisis passed over.

Besides this incident he possessed most logical judgement. He was a faithful friend and did much for other artists.

At the time of war and Disaster he found refuges near Lyon and within this city, then, in December 1942, he reached Switzerland. Atwo years creative efforts still strengthened and comforted him, until full knowledge brought him into borderless despair. Finally he had learned that of all his numerous chechoslovakian relatives no one had remained alive. When the defeat of Nazi-Germany was close and the survivors were full of new hope, on February 5, 1945, Georges Kars took his life. His sufferings and his unwillingness to outlive the Catastrophe were his share in the Jewish ^a martyrdom.

Since 1909 he had exhibited in Paris, first in the Salon d' Automne, since 1913 with the Indépendants, after 1922 in the Salon des Tuileries. His drawings were shown 1922 in La Licorne Gallery, 1928 in that of Bernier. In the same year an exhibit of his paintings was arranged in the Berthe Weill Gallery. He was also represented in international exhibitions; in London (Royal Gallery), Tokyo (1926), Geneva (and Bordeaux (1927), Vienna (1930), finally in Amsterdam. Even amidst the German time his friends took care of two semi-public shows in Lyon. The most impressive one was doubtless the memorial exhibition which Paris saw late in 1945.

Before World War II drawings of the artist were acquired by the Albertina, and Vienna, the Graphic Collection of Mannheim, while some of his paintings are in the museums of Prague, Grenoble and Lyon. The Vienna Museum of Modern Art had also bought one painting. It is doubtful, however, whether any one of the artist's works which the German museums of Hamburg, Hannover, Elberfeld, Wiesbaden and Cologne had possessed still exists. Before 1939 many private collections too were enriched by works of Kars, e.g. that of Eugène de Rothschild, Paris.

Among the authors who wrote about the artist were Florent Pels (G. K.), Edition Triangle, Paris); Hans Tietze (in "Die bildenden Kuenste", Vienna 1919) and in "Kunst und Kuenstler", Berlin 1929); Josef Kalmer (in "Das Zeit", Vienna 1924); Andre Salmon (in "La Revue de France", Paris 1928); Oskar Schuerer (in "Deutsche Kunst und Dekoration", Darmstadt 1928 and 1930); Wino Frank (in "L' Art Vivant", Paris 1929); Aurelie Cottlieb (in "Menorah", Vienna 1932). Apropos of the mentioned memorial show Jacques de Lopard, Claude Roger Marx, Raymond Cogniat and other Parisien critics celebrated our master. May be, however, that the future will still much add to his appreciation.
